Legitimacy and effectiveness in regional and global governance

Coping with the challenges of trans-boundary policy challenges is a topical issue of the current global agenda and the object of a vivid debate among scholars. Global crises with regard to climate change, food, health, finance, or the economy have sparked debates about the role of legitimacy and effectiveness in adequately and rapidly responding to regional and global policy challenges.

Legitimacy is a fundamental political principle, shaping the viability and effectiveness of non-governmental, governmental, or hybrid global governance institutions. Effectiveness in global governance requires adequate and rapid responses to policy challenges. Both legitimacy and effectiveness are related to one another and to other central concepts in global governance such as democracy, authority, and public opinion. In the International Relations (IR) literature, legitimacy and effectiveness have been explored by different theoretical paradigms, diverse methodologies, and various empirical questions. In the empirical IR literature, there are burgeoning debates about the study and measurement of legitimacy and effectiveness through novel theoretical lenses such as social psychology and through innovative methods such as survey experiments.

The ECPR Summer School on International Relations provides encompassing courses on various aspects of legitimacy and effectiveness in regional and global governance. Through a variety of courses taught by renowned IR scholars, students will learn about research on legitimacy and effectiveness at the forefront of IR from various epistemological, theoretical, and methodological perspectives. The summer school covers critical, normative, and positive approaches and offers advanced training in the latest theoretical approaches and cutting-edge quantitative and qualitative methods applied in IR. It encompasses a wide range of issue areas in global governance such as environmental governance, finance and monetary affairs, humanitarian aid, security, and internet governance. In addition, the summer school will connect students to an international forum of researchers and enable them to build an academic network with other junior and senior scholars in IR. Students will have the opportunity to present and discuss their own research to get feedback from the instructors and the other students.

Requirements

The summer school is open to PhD students, research master students and advanced master students from political science, international relations, public administration or related areas. A basic requirement is that all applicants should have completed introductory courses in political and administrative sciences or international relations at the BA-level.

Participants are expected to present their own research in the form of a research paper (6,000 to 8,000 words research paper or book chapter), and to discuss another participant's paper. Exceptionally we will also accept project proposals or research plans. Students should send their papers to jonatan.stiglund@ekohist.su.se by May 29, 2017.

Required application materials

CV

Recommendation letter by advisor

Research paper abstract (up to 500 words)

All material should be sent to jonatan.stiglund@ekohist.su.se by April 24, 2017.

Decisions on admission will be made on May 1, 2017.

Costs

Participants can choose between two packages. The first package includes participation in the summer school only (250,00 EUR per person). The second package includes participation in the summer school as well as accommodation in a hotel in central Stockholm (700,00 EUR per person).

ECTS-points

Upon completion of all parts of the summer school (attendance, paper presentation, and discussion), students are awarded a certificate for 7.5 ECTS-points.
